The Gross Domestic Product (GDP) declined in the third quarter 2008 in comparison to the previous quarter as well as the same quarter in 2007. While the industrial and services sector growth declined considerably, the agriculture sector recorded a historically highest quarterly growth, which is suspect. For the first time in the past three years agriculture growth has surpassed the growth of the other two sectors and the overall GDP growth, which is not supported by the crop-wise production data.
